

Gentlemen,

I derive considerable benefit and enjoyment from XM Radio in its current form and look forward to increased services. To block XM Radio's future with restrictions to protect an existing broadcast structure would be equal to restricting the production of light bulbs to protect the kerosene lantern companies.

Terrestrial Broadcast Companies could have accomplished the same level of service over a decade ago by upgrading analog transmitters to digital multi channel transmitters. They were complacent and now they should pay the price for their inattention to the market.

Sincerely,

Dale Ludington
